Memory is the faculty or capacity itself; recollection and remembrance are exercises of the faculty, while reminiscence is the thing remembered. Recollection differs from remembrance in implying more effort. To remember is to keep in mind, and things thus laid up in memory come to our remembrance without voluntary or conscious effort, but we strive to recollect things or thoughts past or practically forgotten. Recollection like reminiscence is sometimes used in the sense of that which is recollected; but it differs from it in that its object is more complex, not one scene or event, but a connected series. Reminiscence is scarcely used in reference to past thoughts, being commonly used in reference to past events; while recollection is peculiary appropriate to the act of recalling mental operations.]; motsv. adj. memorative, memorial; ur ~t, from memory; memoriter; i friskt ~, fresh (ell. green) in memory; som är ännu i friskt ~, well-remembered; behålla i ~t, remember; commemorate; preserve (ell. retain) in memory; vårda ~t af ngn, cherish anyone's memory; föra ~t af, commemorate; lägga på ~t, remember; commit to memory; lay up in memory (ell. one's mind); till ~t af, in memory (ell. commemoration) of; högtid. in memoriam Lat. of; dåligt ~, bad (ell. torpent) memory; godt ~, good (ell. retentive) memory; hjelpa ngns ~, help (ell. jog) anyone's memory; föra ngn till ~s, bring back to anyone's mind; draga ngt till ~s, återkalla i ~t, recollect; call back to one's mind; call to memory (ell. mind); falla ur ~t, fall out of mind (ell. memory); escape one's memory; om mitt ~ icke bedrager mig, if I remember rightly; teckna sig till ~s, make a note of; note down; hedra ngns ~, honour anyone's memory; fästa (sig) i ~t, fix in (one's) memory; fastna i ~t, stick in one's memory; ha ngn i ~, remember anyone; ett upp och två i ~t, write one and carry two; dot and carry one. 2. samtycke countenance, connivance, concurrence, privity, [implied] consent, approval: favour, knowledge; med hans goda ~, with his connivance; utan mitt goda ~, without my consent [implied or otherwise]; me unwittingly. 3. föremål token of remembrance; vanl. souvenir Fr., keepsake.

Grace is a term used in regard to those who have offended, and made themselves liable to punishment. Pardon is granted only to such as have committed a crime or an offence: and mercy generally implies ill-desert in the person in whom it is bestowed; but favour is an act of kindness to such as may need it. In Christian communities the people are distinguished into clergy and laity; and the clergy comprises such persons as are regularly licensed or ordained as ministers or preachers of the gospel; yet in England, those who preside over dissenting congregations are not styled clergymen, but ministers. In the Episcopal Church the clergy is divided into three general orders, bishops, priests, and deacons. In the English establishment, there are other orders subordinate to bishops, as deans (next in rank to bishops), arch-deacons; also prebendaries and canons, who are beneficed clergymen connected with cathedral or collegiate churches. The pastors of parishes, or parish priests (in catholic Ireland), who receive tithes of a parish, are rectors, vicars, parsons, or curates; but curates are commonly clergymen employed by rectors, etc., to assist them, or to perform their duties. By the word parson is implied one of a particular class of clergy, whereas by the word clergyman is understood any person ordained to serve at the altar. Persons are always priests; many clergymen are only deacons. Every bishop, dean, prebendary etc., is a clergyman, though not always a parson. A minister is one who actually or habitually serves at the altar. The clergyman who delegates his functions is not a minister. The dissenting clergy are all ministers.]. -mössa, f. fort. priest-cap. -möte, n. convocation [of clergy]. -näsa, f. på fogel parson's nose; pope's nose.

Contagious poisons communicate the property of producing similar poisons; the small-pox is characteristically a contagious disease. By some writers, the term contagious has been limited to diseases requiring actual contact for their communication; but contagious matter appears often transmissible by the air; hence the term immediate and mediate contagion. Diseases propagated through the medium of the air, are generally called infectious. Diseases which attack great numbers of people at the same time, are termed epidemic, as the influenza and the cholera. Diseases confined to particular localities are styled endemic, as the goitre and the ague; and those which originate in the affections of the atmosphere and have a resemblance to the plague, are termed pestilential.
